Texas A&M's campus is the heart of College Station, making it a great place to start if you've never been here before. There's nowhere better to start than Kyle Field, the school's hallowed ground for football and one of the biggest stadiums in the country. On game days you'll be in the midst of more than 100,000 people tailgating, sightseeing and rooting for our team. While you're on campus, don't miss the George H. W. Bush Presidential Library and Museum. Featuring thousands of artifacts and pieces of memorabilia from the life and presidency of George Bush, as well as broader subjects, the museum is a world-class addition to the A&M experience.

For all its tradition, the A&M campus is not the only place in College Station where the past meets the present. The Benjamin Knox Gallery, where the eponymous artist serves up Aggie-centric paintings and hand-picked wines, is housed inside the old College Station train depot that gave rise to the city's name in 1877. Across the street from campus, you'll find Century Square – a modern take on a traditional town square, anchored by two boutique hotels, The George and Cavalry Court. Surrounding these two properties you'll find numerous boutiques and shops such as Apricot Lane Boutique, Lucchese Bootmaker and King Ranch Saddle Shop, as well as a bustling green space – perfect for hanging out!

When it's time to eat, you'll find a variety of restaurants in College Station. Try the crispy chicken fingers topped with the famous secret sauce at local favorite Layne's, an Aggie staple. Meanwhile, Hullabaloo Diner delivers with comfort foods like chicken fried steak, cheese fries, and biscuits and gravy.
